Experiment One-

Is it possible to replace a human arm
with that of an ettin?

Hypothesis-Anything
is possible...

Experiment-
ingrediants:

One human-willing or unwilling

One Ettin-restrained

One bottle of greater
poison-for the ettin

Procedure:

Restrain both the
ettin and the human,
each with an arm
extended...does not matter which one.

Administer the poison
to the ettin so that he cannot move, but is still coherent. While waiting for the poison
to work, sharpen a
good blade as to get an even cut. With said blade, remove the arm of the human and quickly cauterize it
with an open flame.

Notice how the human screams in agony...

Next use the same
method on the ettin's arm. It, too will scream in pain.

Take the arm of the
ettin and fleshcraft it in the place where the human arm was removed. Cauterize the wound again then wait for it to heal. Dispose of the ettin.

Results:

The removal and reattachment of the arm were successful. However, the human bled to death on the table.

Conclusion:

Next time, find a way to stop the bleeding more quickly.
